Fine art print costs are more expensive than department store prints.

The greater cost is due not only the greater labor involved in creating the image, but also due to the processing, printing and treatment to create a product that can last for generations.

All images are giclée prints on a canvas medium. After the print has dried, it is coated with a protective matte varnish. This varnish UV-protects the print as well as protects it against mild water damage. The prints can then be either be placed on stretcher frames like a traditional oil canvas or shipped rolled.

For rolled prints (not framed), the above costs include ground shipping.

Stretcher framing adds $50 to the above cost; shipping will be an additional charge (5%) for oversize packing. CA tax will be added if we ship to a CA address.
